Thomas Grey Interiors and 3ten Architecture Unite to Form Greyten, Breaking New Ground in Architectural Innovation

October 17, 2024 - In a bold move set to transform the architectural and design landscape, Thomas Grey Interiors and 3ten Architecture today announce their merger to form Greyten, a groundbreaking studio that transcends the traditional boundaries between architecture and interior design. This strategic union represents more than a merger, it's a departure from stale architecture and design to infuse soul into the environments in which we live; the perfect marriage of form and function.

Operating from a historically significant location, the former Aida's Silver Jewelry and Coffee House at 920 East First Street in Wichita (originally built in 1951 for the Arnholz Coffee Building in the Wichita Warehouse and Jobbers District), Greyten will deliver a comprehensive suite of services that blend technical precision with thoughtful design, transforming spaces into environments that are both functional and beautiful.

"This merger embodies our belief that a strong design should be greater than the sum of its parts," says Chad Glenn, Principal Architect and co-founder of Greyten. "We're not just combining two firms; we're creating an entirely new architectural experience—a practice that pushes beyond the expected, bringing both technical precision and soulful design to every project we touch."

Rachel Thomas-Murphy, Creative Director and co-founder of Greyten, emphasizes the firm's distinctive approach: "Greyten represents a departure from the standard architectural melee. We're building a team and a culture that dares to color outside the lines, creating spaces that resonate with personality and purpose. Our commitment goes beyond aesthetics, we're here to show our clients the way to possibilities they hadn't imagined."

Chelsea Cotten, Chief Operating Officer and co-founder of Greyten, adds: "Our promise is simple: we leave it greater. This philosophy extends beyond our projects to our people. At Greyten, everyone leads—from our design team to our partners and clients. We're building a culture where creativity thrives, where our team members can achieve their full potential, and where clients become true collaborators in the design process. By nurturing this ecosystem of growth and innovation, we're able to deliver spaces that exceed expectations and elevate the human experience in ways that neither firm could achieve alone."

The new practice will offer an expanded suite of services including:

- Site selection and real estate development
- Design-Build Project Management
- Building Condition Assessment and as-builts
- Project Concepting
- Commercial and Residential Construction Drawings
- Interior Design, Furniture Selection and Decor
- Interior Retail Showroom

About Greyten

Greyten is an architectural and interior design firm that believes in leaving spaces greater than we found them. By combining technical expertise with soulful design, we create environments that transform how people live and work. Our approach bridges the gap between architecture and interior design, delivering solutions that are both unexpected and timeless.
